I am a huge fan of cosmography and sci-fi movies. Basically, anything that extends beyond our comprehension immediately arouse my attention and affection. Where lays the boundary between actual reality and surreality? Is fantasy authentic? Maybe there is no boundary; maybe our world is simply based on a hallucination. Organic shapes, astronomical bodies, cosmos-void are always attractive to me. I often stay outside at night (even in winter), heading up towards the dark sky embellished with stars and clouds, watching and staring at it, wondering how small we human beings are in comparison to the vast universe yonder. Life is amazing, so much so that I am almost sure there will be extraterrestrial worlds that are either 'better' or 'worse' than our endearing earth. Are we alone? Will we ever be able to connect to the other life forms beyond our reach? I ask myself again and again, and 'write' them down onto my work. Like Voyager 1, which has already left the solar system and may slipped into interstellar space, probing and advancing.
